LANGURE module objectives

1. Write in a way that will engage and reward the attention of your audience.

   1. Who is your target audience?

   2. Which disciplines are represented?

2. Introduce doctoral students to the central ethical issue(s) in research in their discipline.

   How many issues are central to your discipline?

3. When selecting the issues, avoid issues covered in the core course.

   Focus on broader ethical and social implications of research?

4. Provide guidance concerning how the issue(s) might best be resolved.

5. Defend your guidance by referring to moral principles covered in the core.

6. Include references to additional web sources of information.

7. Include one multiple-choice question per page testing simple comprehension of the material.

8. End with links to case studies on the web that may be used as focal points for the departmental seminars. We envision departments holding seminars in week 6 that assume students have first completed the first 5 weeks of the core course PLUS your module. The seminar can either be dedicated to further exploration of your module, or to one of the case studies you recommend.
